

“The Monument was a demonstration of the falsity and the absurdity of some of the theories that went on in that period of time.”

The Continuous Monument

is an illustration crafted by Super studio in 1969 which suggests that by extending a single piece of architecture over the entire world they could establish a unified global order. This monument was strongly influenced by left-leaning, anti-consumerist and anti-capitalist ideas, which were common among radical designers in Italy during the 1960s-1970s.

It was a reaction against consumer-focused models, depicting a bizarre and uncomfortable design which exposes the absurdity of “machines for living,” condemning how technology and modernized architecture belittles the beauty in landscape.

The Continuous NETWORK.

A modern reimagination of SuperStudios dystopian depiction of The Continuous Monument